ADAM WOOD MANTELS

In the creation of wood mantels, the genius of Robert Adam found its best and truest expression.

Delicate in line, exquisite in detail, perfect in proportion and chaste in conception, each individual piece which bears even the slightest indication of having been wrought under the direct supervision of the master craftsman, brings its own price, is constantly sought after, and relentlessly tracked down by the collector and art lover.

This consuming demand renders it most difficult to procure true and authentic originals from which to make my reproductions, despite the fact that I make frequent trips abroad and employ several assistants in my London office, who are constantly on the lookout for some rare and generally unknown piece of the period.

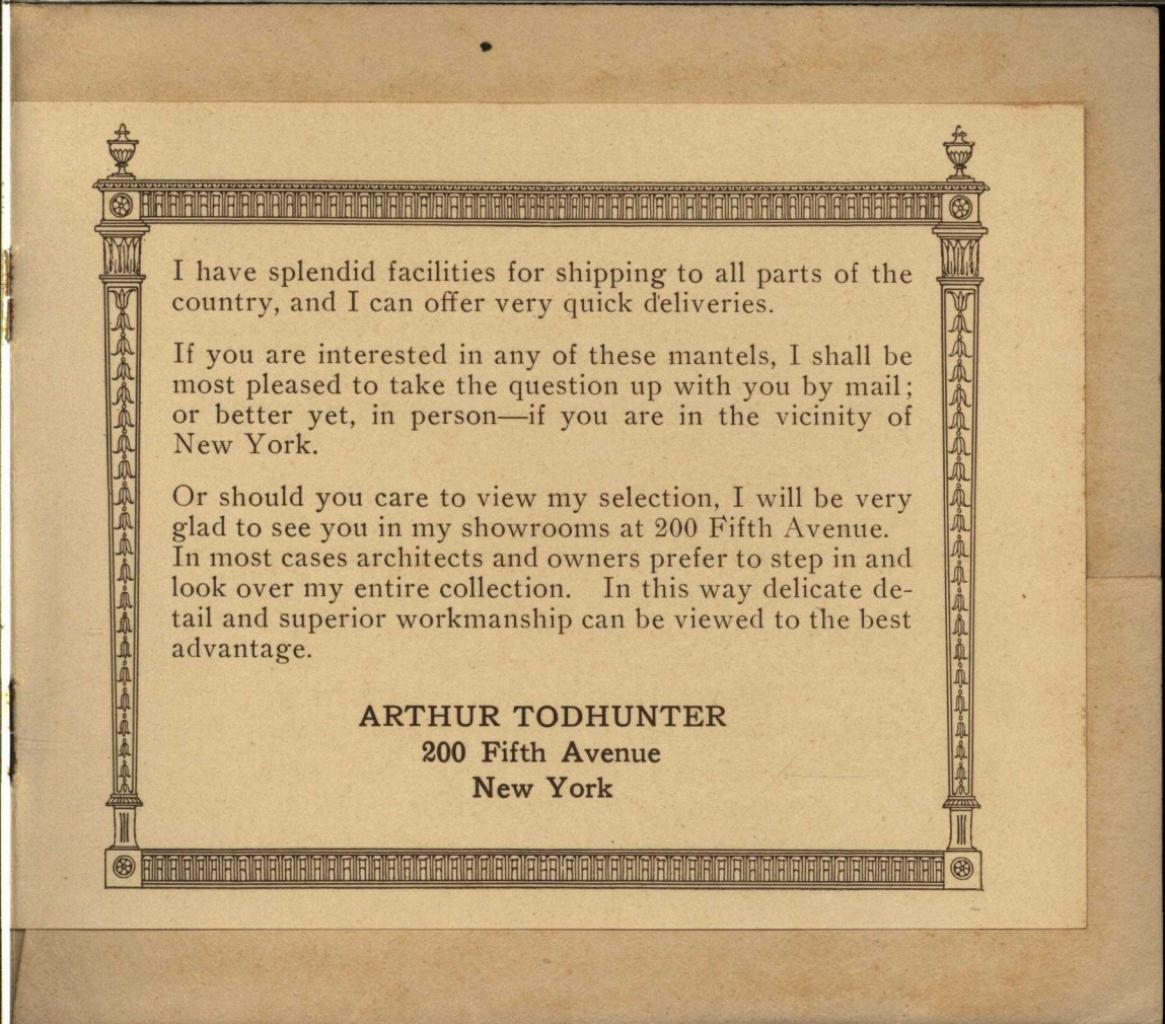

These old pieces are brought over to this country with great care, and faithful reproductions are secured by my force of skilled artisans, who know the art of taking infinite pains down to the minutest detail.

Only thus can an exact replica of the original be assured, and I need not hesitate to state that the finished reproductions, so far as feeling and actual dimensions are concerned, correspond absolutely to their 18th century prototypes.

My prices are not cheap, neither are they excessive; they are consistent with the work turned out. In consideration of the difficulty and expense entailed in securing good originals, to say nothing of the thought, the time, and the skilled labor, all of which are found embodied in each individual mantel, my prices are actually low.

But I cannot compete with the manufacturer of commercial mantels—I never try to.

I have splendid facilities for shipping to all parts of the country, and I can offer very quick deliveries.

If you are interested in any of these mantels, I shall be most pleased to take the question up with you by mail; or better yet, in person—if you are in the vicinity of New York.

Or should you care to view my selection, I will be very glad to see you in my showrooms at 200 Fifth Avenue. In most cases architects and owners prefer to step in and look over my entire collection. In this way delicate detail and superior workmanship can be viewed to the best advantage.
